The War Service of Old Oregon

The University's record during the world war is one in which every son and daughter of Old Oregon must take special pride. The instantaneous response to the call to arms; the unquestioned loyalty of students, faculty and alumni the country over; the quality of service rendered to the nation, all redound to the credit of the University.

Of the 1394 men furnished to active service in the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps, more than sixty per cent rose above the rank of private. And forty percent actually became commissioned officers.

Thus, in time of stress, the ability of the University to produce leaders, men who could be trusted and followed was tested and found not wanting.

All told, the University of Oregon furnished 2034 to war service; of these six hundred were enlisted in the Student's Army Training Corps, twelve were officers in the Red Cross and other organizations and forty were women who did noble service as nurses, reconstruction aides and canteen workers.

Fifteen University of Oregon men were decorated or cited for exceptional bravery in action, receiving the Croix de Guerre of both France and Belgium, the Distinguished Service Cross, the Victory Cross and the Order of the Chevaliere of the Crown of Italy.

The University's Honored War Dead

Forty-seven of the University of Oregon men who donned the uniform made the supreme sacrifice. Some of them died in action; some in the comparative inaction of camps and cantonments on this side of the water; some were mentioned in the dispatches of Allied Generals for extraordinary heroism in battle; some died as high officers in command of many men; others as privates doing well some humble task. All are of equal account for all gave freely that greatest gift in their possession, that gift that levels all ranks, humbles all ceremony, makes weak and ineffective all attempts at tribute.

In the unselfishness with which they gave their lives for their country, these men represent what the University strives to inculcate in all her sons and daughters—willingness to serve unselfishly and to give freely for the common good.

This service and this ideal will be enduringly and strikingly commemorated in the War Memorial Court that the alumni will build as a monument to the University's war service and a tribute to her war dead.

Old Oregon's Tribute to Her War Dead

That the memory of sacrifice and service in the days of the great world war may not dim to a mere empty echo of words almost forgotten, the alumni of the University of Oregon have determined to build a lasting and a beautiful memorial to those who died and those who served—the War Memorial Court around which the new building development on the Campus will center. At this shrine the students of future college generations will light anew the torch of patriotic devotion to their country. In its stately and dignified lines will be preserved a suggestion of the high cause for which men fought and the valor with which they died.

Above the gross and the dreadful in war, the grim suffering, the injustice and the greed, these white pillars of the memorial court will rise as a symbol of that pure idealism for which youth spent its energies and gave its life.

This Memorial Court is the alumni tribute to the war service of Old Oregon. It is the heart and center of the alumni building program which is to provide a better University for the students who are to seek education on the campus at Eugene. The alumni program is three-fold: It will provide a great Library for the nourishing of men's minds, a gymnasium and outdoor athletic fields for the up-building of their bodies, and the memorial court for the strengthening of their spirits.

Mere sums of money can never express the love that sons and daughters of Old Oregon feel for their Alma Mater, their reverence for the memory of their comrades who died in the time of war, their appreciation of the benefits which they received at the hands of the University.

But the raising of a million dollars is an outward and visible sign of deep loyalty and purpose. It will involve determined effort, personal sacrifice, and devotion to a cause even as those who died were devoted to a cause. It will put fresh meaning and new life into what we are proud to call "The Old Oregon Spirit."
